

Total Environmental Compliance wins contract with Isle of Anglesey County Council

4 years ago

Total Environmental Compliance (TEC) has recently been awarded a Legionella Prevention and Maintenance contract with Isle of Anglesey County Council that covers all schools, leisure centres, public toilets, corporate buildings and depots.

The company works with a number of local authorities in England and Wales. It is proud to provide water hygiene and legionella services to local authorities to ensure full compliance when it comes to public buildings and facilities.

Its team of water hygiene engineers and technicians will be carrying out a range of quarterly water hygiene and legionella monitoring activities such as routine flushing, descaling and temperature monitoring. In addition to this it will be providing annual inspections, servicing, water sampling, clean and disinfections.

Total Environmental Compliance provides water hygiene, water treatment and consultancy services in the public sector, in accordance with the current recognised legislative requirements and best industry practice.

Its experienced and expert team attends sites to undertake statutory and routine inspections using state of the art equipment. It provides real time and accurate data, continually backed up, to demonstrate a full audit trail with concise and reliable compliance monitoring. Isle of Anglesey County Council will be provided with access to a client portal providing assurance and transparency.

A spokesperson for TEC said: "By successfully combining the latest technology, water industry knowledge and expertise for more than 25 years, it makes us the clear choice when it comes to managing and maintaining high standards of water safety and compliance. We deliver successful outcomes for clients, tenants, residents and building users.

"We look forward to working with Isle of Anglesey County Council."

Photo credit: TEC