

Access Group appoints new chief information & data officer as growth continues

3 years ago

The Access Group, a leading provider of business management software, has announced the appointment of a new Chief Information and Data Officer as the business continues its global expansion.

Wayne Fraser joins Access to bring his deep understanding of data management and science, internal systems, analytics and efficiency processes. He will provide internal consultancy and commercial optimisation to support a growing global roadmap and lead the transformation program of internal applications and data functions.

Wayne has held several senior global roles in telecommunications companies including O2 and Vodafone, and most recently at Barclays Bank where he was Global Head of System and Service Management and Technology CDO.

Commenting on his appointment, Wayne said: "This new role presents an exciting challenge for me. The Access Group is at the forefront of providing technology for the mid-market and by developing and implementing strategic plans through the use of data and automated intelligence, we will continue to enhance the growth of the business.

"I have been working with progressive organisations for two decades and I look forward to drawing on that experience to help The Access Group to further develop its internal systems. I'll be working closely with the board to continue putting customers and colleagues at the heart of everything we do."

Welcoming Wayne to Access, Rob Binns, CFO of The Access Group, said: "Wayne's knowledge and experience will be a huge asset to us as we continue to grow. With his deep experience of bridging the gap between business leaders and technology audiences, Wayne is well placed to offer Access his globally focused insights. He is going to be a hugely valuable addition to the team.”

Image Credit: Access Group