

Savills Earth continues its expansion with appointment of new director Marylis Ramos

3 years ago

Savills Earth, the firm's specialist team of energy and sustainability consultants, has continued its expansion with the appointment of Marylis Ramos who joins as a director based at the firm's Finsbury Circus House office in the City of London.

Marylís has more than 14 years' experience developing sustainability strategies and advising on environmental and passive design techniques. She joins Savills from architectural firm PRP, where she was responsible for leading the sustainability team and a number of high-profile research projects, whilst also advising on environmental design strategies, health and wellbeing, and social value strategies. Prior to this, Marylis was a sustainability researcher at award winning architecture firm Foster + Partners, there she was instrumental in developing the company's sustainable design policy.

Joining Savills Earth, which provides cross-divisional expertise in relation to land use, sustainable infrastructure, the decarbonisation of property portfolios and the delivery of energy efficiency at an individual building level, Marylis will work with clients advising on their sustainability and net zero carbon strategies.

Marylís Ramos, director in the Savills Earth team, comments: "I am excited to be joining Savills at such a critical time for the property industry as it continues to take a more proactive approach to tackling climate change. I look forward to being a part of Savills Earth and helping our clients to set and achieve their sustainability goals."

David Jackson, Head of the Savills Earth team, adds: “We are delighted to welcome Marylis to Savills. Her expertise and breadth of experience will no doubt help to bolster Savills Earth and support our clients in meeting their net zero ambitions.”
