3 years ago

A team of specialist engineers from GIND UK is on site at Plumtree Court in London – the new headquarters of Goldman Sachs – where it is conducting quality and load testing of the building’s façade access equipment.

The new European headquarters is a state-of-the-art office building with super-modern amenities and sustainability features – right in the heart of the City of London, where Goldman Sachs opened its first London office nearly fifty years ago.

With more than one million square feet of space, Plumtree Court (PTC) houses the largest trading floor in London and includes eight floors for workplace and two plus floors with a range of amenities, such as: café and dining spaces; an auditorium and conference centre; health centre; children’s centre; fitness centre; bicycle parking; and all-gender changing and showering facilities. Throughout the workplace floors there are additional amenities including barista-style coffee bars, meeting rooms and pantries, soft seating, and wellness facilities like resting rooms and nursing mothers’ rooms.

GIND UK’s skilled and trained operatives are trusted by a large number of leading blue chip clients to perform vital testing and maintenance work to ensure their façade access equipment is fully safe and ready for operation.
