

JLL lands Raoul Veevers as Head of London Planning

3 years ago

JLL has announced that Raoul Veevers will join as Head of London Planning.

Raoul joins JLL from Cluttons and prior to that spent over 20 years at Montagu Evans developing their London planning team.

He is experienced in advising public sector bodies, institutional funds, registered providers plus private landowners and developers turn. More specifically Raoul has worked with Linkcity Bouygues, Great Portland Estates, Hammerson, Barratt London, Unite, Lewisham Homes, Clarion and CBRE IM on a range of projects from Hallsville Quarter Canning Town and The Home Office to RHS Wisely, 60 Threadneedle Street and Vauxhall Island. His most recent client experience at Cluttons included working with numerous investment funds and charitable organisations.

At JLL, he will lead the London Planning team working with clients to provide expert planning advice as a core part of its end-to-end Consulting services throughout the property lifecycle.

Andrew Frost, Head of Capital Markets at JLL said: "Raoul's appointment reaffirms our intention to continue to build a leading planning capability. His experience coupled with our own means we're well positioned to advise a breadth of clients on a diverse range of planning issues from major regeneration to complex London based development sites. Furthermore, aligning our planning capability with our other Land & Development Consulting services means we're continuing to support our clients with today's challenges and opportunities from emerging legislation and regeneration through to asset repositioning."

Commenting on his new role, Raoul Veevers added: "I am extremely excited by the opportunity to work with the experienced planning and development teams at JLL and to contribute to the future growth of the

