

JLL appoints Cameron Stott to lead Scotland

3 years ago

JLL has announced that Cameron Stott will take on a new role as head of Scotland. Cameron will replace Alasdair Humphery who after 20 years in leadership positions, will take on a consultant role in JLL's capital markets team.

Cameron has been at JLL almost 30 years and most recently led the Edinburgh office. He is highly respected office agent across the Edinburgh market and has worked with developers, corporates and the public sector on some of the most significant developments in the market. Cameron will split his time equally between the head of Scotland role and continuing his highly successful office agency role with clients and colleagues

JLL has named Jason Hogg as the new head of Edinburgh; he has been with JLL for almost 25 years and has led strong growth in its residential business through expansion into new markets typified now by growth into the build-to-rent market.

Simon Peacock, head of regions at JLL, said: "JLL's commitment to the continued growth and development of our people has ensured that we have the right talent in place to succeed Alasdair and I am pleased to announce these new roles for Cameron and Jason.

"Those who've worked with Cameron, will have benefited from his direction and ability to bring people together to work towards common goals. His future vision for JLL in Scotland has our full support as we move through 2023 and beyond. Like Cameron Jason will bring energy and ideas as we look to better connect clients and people across offices, regions and business lines."

This announcement follows JLL's recent appointment of Tom McWilliams as head of the North East region and its Leeds office.