

Inviron celebrates its Annual Apprentice Day

2 years ago

With over 30 apprentices across Inviron, the technical FM provider currently offer one of the largest apprenticeship schemes within the industry.

Whilst they have traditional FM apprenticeships such as electrical, gas and plumbing, they also provide opportunities for those wanting to explore other areas from Project Management, Quantity Surveying, Helpdesk and Contract Support through to Sales and Marketing. This has allowed them to shine a light on the FM industry and encourage apprenticeships in all aspects of their business.

To ensure Inviron provides the best opportunities for their apprentices, they often bring them together to network, collaborate and demonstrate teamwork. As part of National Apprenticeship Week, they celebrated their Annual Apprentice Day yesterday in a quirky London venue.

The day included their annual challenge, where apprentices were tasked with pitching a new product to five Inviron Senior Managers. Noel Clancy (Inviron MD and ex-apprentice), hosted the Dragon's Den style pitch activity, where apprentices collaborated on a sales pitch for an environmentally friendly product. Inviron organised a speed networking session and also heard from one of their Business Unit Director, who gave an insight into how he had progressed throughout his career having started as an apprentice.

To conclude the event, they celebrated their fantastic apprentices and crowned Bradley as their Apprentice of The Year for 2022.

Noel Clancy, Managing Director, commented: "I am absolutely passionate about our apprenticeship programme and delighted to be a part of these events. My apprenticeship opened up a world full of opportunities for me which is why I will continue to support the next generation wherever possible. We have an excellent cohort within Inviron and in comparison to our FM peers, our apprenticeship programme is one that we can feel exceptionally proud of.”
