

Enable marks momentous first year with new chair appointment

2 years ago

ENABLE, a company that provides advice to help make homes and businesses more energy efficient, has appointed Paul Gratton as its new Chair as it looks to accelerate growth after a successful first 12 months.

Paul said: "With the rapid rise in fuel prices there has never been a greater requirement for people to understand the most effective things they can do to reduce the amount of energy consumed.

"With homes responsible for over 20% of the UK's harmful carbon emissions and around 27 million homes that need improvements if they are to meet the government's carbon reduction and efficiency targets, the potential market opportunity is huge. The unbiased advice that Enable offers is central to tackling the need to make homes greener, more energy efficient and cheaper to run."

Joe Miller, CEO of Enable, said: "We've had a fantastic first year, not only reflecting the enormous efforts of our team but also the need and demand for our services that make practical and unbiased suggestions about how to meet energy and efficiency targets.

"We're passionate about improving businesses and people's homes because we believe that can significantly improve people's lives as well as contributing to carbon reduction. Paul shares this vision and his drive and experience in rapidly growing many successful and innovative businesses will allow us to scale even more quickly to help even more people have warm and affordable homes."

To find out more about Enable, visit www.enable-services.co.uk