

Cory Reynolds joins Veolia ExCo

2 years ago

The UK's leading resource management company, Veolia, announces that Cory Reynolds will join the Executive Committee as Corporate Affairs and Communications Director.

An established corporate affairs leader in the environmental services and water industries, Cory brings wide-ranging communications expertise as well as a passion for policy and public affairs. Cory will lead Veolia UK and I's external and internal communications, policy, and lobbying, with additional responsibility for these areas across its Northern Europe zone.

Beginning her career at the BBC, Cory is a well-known industry figure with a wealth of experience across sustainability and resource management within both the public and private sectors. She will be instrumental in delivering Veolia's ambition to become the benchmark company for ecological transformation.

Commenting on her appointment, Veolia's Corporate Affairs and Communications Director, Cory Reynolds said: "I look forward to putting corporate affairs at the heart of what Veolia does, and working with industry-leading experts from across our business to promote our solutions for decarbonisation, depollution and resource regeneration to tackle the great environmental challenges of our time."