

Independent school and workplace caterer Palmer & Howells has announced it appointed Ryan Wilson as its head of food.

1 year ago

With over three decades of experience in the culinary world, he is described by the company as a seasoned professional with a knack for creating fresh.

He has been executive chef at many prestigious schools including Wellington College, Wycombe Abbey and Caterham School. As a skilled chef and leader, Mr Wilson has recently been involved in shaping the future landscape of workplace catering across the UK and Ireland.

The company stated that he will continue to revolutionise and disrupt the world of contract catering with his innovative approach and commitment to excellence.

Mr Wilson said: "I am excited to lead the Palmer & Howells food strategy which encapsulates what is important for clients, employees, pupils and parents – delicious, modern and nutritious food which is freshly prepared and ethically sourced. I share Palmer & Howells' dedication to wholesome and balanced diets which play such a crucial role in boosting wellbeing for all."

Managing director Jeremy Alderton said: "We are delighted that Ryan is joining our team. Ryan's expertise and passion for mentoring and developing talent will undoubtedly make him a valuable asset to the culinary team at Palmer & Howells and the wider industry."
