

Facilities and workplace managers to benefit from first-of-its-kind signage solution

2 years ago

A leading safety equipment and signage specialist has developed an industry-first solution for workplace and facilities managers.

Message Works offers a purpose-built e-commerce application, allowing users to create compliant signs in more than 300 bespoke configurations that are not available elsewhere online.

The idea came from the Advanced Safety team who, having successfully run PPE and safety products business, Advanced Safety, for more than 20 years, identified a need to reduce the back and forth between customer and supplier in the process of ordering safety signage.

Message Works enables users to order signs in nine different sizes, with a choice of materials, thickness and finish. There is also the option to add logos and stickers, with all safety signage delivered direct to where it's needed.

The service is underpinned by a specialist team of signage makers with many years of industry experience.

Michal Wochna says that Message Works has the potential to reduce the time purchasers typically spend liaising with safety signage suppliers.

He said: "Safety signage remains a fundamental requirement of every workplace, from facility changes to providing vital information for workers or visitors.

“The current process for ordering signs can be clunky due to the frequent correspondence required to get the design just right. By providing a sign builder tool where users can create signage that meets specific requirements, this traditionally lengthy process is significantly reduced.

“There is nothing else like this available in the safety signage market and we’re incredibly excited about the potential it offers to new and existing customers.”
