

Adam Jones joins the Sitemark team as Security Project Manager

12 months ago

Sitemark has welcomed Adam Jones as its new Security Project Manager. Adam will support Sitemark's growing security consultancy, which includes benchmark security reviews, expert recommendations and comprehensive reports to enhance the security of a business' assets, people, and property.

Adam is excited to join the team, he says "I'm passionate about people, their wellbeing, safety and the environment so this role is the perfect fit for me. Sitemark are one of the leading consultants in facilities management and I look forward to helping clients find the right systems to ensure their property and assets are safe and secure".

Adam has over 40 years' experience at Senior Director level in facilities management covering a range of areas including security operations, threat and risk management, and designing security solutions for high value property, buildings, locations, and assets.

With an impressive range of achievements, including a master's in business continuity, security and emergency management (Distinction), and a national award from The Security Institute for the most outstanding research contribution to the UK security industry (2013), Sitemark are confident that Adam will deliver high value to their existing and new clients.

Mike Boxall, Managing Director for Sitemark says, "Running a business means keeping staff, assets and buildings secure, and with the new legislation around security it's more important than ever to get it right. Adam has an impressive eye for detail and effective critical analysis when managing our client's security services. We're sure that he'll bring immense value to Sitemark and our Security Consultancy services".

Sitemark are always on the lookout for talented Facilities Management professionals to join our growing team. To find out more, head to www.sitemark.co.uk/vacancies/