12 months ago

One of the divisional directors of Premier Technical Services Group Ltd \(PTSG\), Mark Davison, is a special guest at the PASMA 50th Anniversary Celebration on Thursday 12 September.

Mark is highly regarded and experienced in the field of building access systems. As well as being Cradles Maintenance Director of PTSG's Access & Safety division, he is also the Chair of SAEMA (Specialist Access Engineering and Maintenance Association), the national trade body responsible for gathering and sharing best practice in raising standards for the UK permanent and temporary access industry.

The PASMA 50th celebrations will take place at the Royal Lancaster London, situated on Lancaster Terrace, opposite Kensington Gardens. There will be a networking lunch at 12pm, followed by the conference from 1pm to 4.30pm. The three-course gala dinner takes place at 7.30pm in the Westbourne Suite. Entertainment will be provided by magical host Ben Hanlin (back by popular demand!), retired befeater Moira Cameron, who has her own 'tales from the tower' to share, and music from the AlleyCatz.

PASMA (Pre-fabricated Access Suppliers' and Manufacturers' Association) was founded in 1974 by volunteer industry members. During the last half-century, its members have paved the way for progress on safety standards, training and certification for the tower industry. From the very first committee meeting to the introduction of training itself, the association has played a historic role in championing working at height safety.
