

Smart Buildings Show celebrates hugely successful 2024 event

2 years ago

As the standout event in the smart buildings sector, the Smart Buildings Show once again demonstrated its capacity to draw a crowd, attracting 2,395 visitors from across the industry.

Taking place at ExCeL London on 9th-10th October, the two-day event saw visitors flock to conference sessions hosted by prominent industry speakers and visit the stands of leading smart buildings vendors. With more than 90 industry exhibitors in attendance, the show provided the perfect opportunity to get close to the latest and greatest products currently making waves in the smart buildings market. The four packed conference theatres demonstrated strong visitor appetite to hear more about key industry topics relating to energy management, controls and networks, IT and infrastructure, and management and proptech.

Ian Garmeson, Event Director, commented: "The popularity of this year's event demonstrates the ever-growing interest in the industry and we'd like to thank all of our exhibitors, speakers and supporters for helping to make the show the leading event in the smart buildings arena. Attendances continue to grow and the show's top industry billing has resulted in a record number of rebookings for next year."

Neil Salt, an exhibitor and speaker for Forest Rock, commented, "Everything has been very positive - visitor numbers are up, leads are up. The location is also great which makes a massive difference to us."

Anthony Dann from Trend Control Systems was equally positive and said: "Really good number of leads. This is our industry show."

Smart Buildings Show will return to ExCeL London on 15th-16th October 2025.
