12 months ago

Leading Infrastructure services provider, Keltbray Infrastructure Services Limited ("KISL") has renamed and rebranded to AUREOS.

In August 2024 KISL was acquired by EMK Capital and embarked on a process to rename and rebrand itself, epitomising its role providing infrastructure services in the energy security and decarbonised transport sectors. The process was highly inclusive, involving employee engagement and customer feedback.

The new contemporary name, which broadly translates as 'a new dawn', reflects the company's ambition to deliver sustainable energy and transport networks that support the transition to a low carbon future whilst improving societal connectivity.

Darren James, CEO, AUREOS, said: "This is an important time in the evolution of our company. As AUREOS we commit to all our stakeholders to always strive to be their first choice as 'The leading infrastructure engineering services provider for the energy security and decarbonised transport sectors.'

"I am particularly pleased with the engagement of our extended team in choosing the new company name as we enter the next exciting phase of growth."
