

PTSG Director recognised for exceptional STEM education contribution

4 months ago

Premier Technical Services Group Ltd (PTSG) has announced that Matthew Gilmore, Technical Director at Guardian – part of PTSG Electrical Services Ltd – has been commended by the Leicestershire Education Business Company (LEBC) for his outstanding commitment to STEM education.

Throughout the past academic year, Gilmore has volunteered at multiple LEBC school events, sharing his expertise and enthusiasm to inspire the next generation of electricians, engineers and innovators. His involvement reflects a deep-rooted passion for education and for opening up opportunities in technical careers.

The feedback from students highlights the impact of his work, with one describing the event as “the best I’ve ever taken part in – it made my brain work, and that’s a good thing,” while others said it had given them “so many ideas” about their future and left them feeling “reassured” after their questions were answered.

Guardian, like the wider PTSG Group, is committed to nurturing emerging talent and addressing skills gaps in the electrical industry. By engaging directly with young people, the company aims to break down barriers to entry and showcase the breadth of opportunities available.

Gilmore’s recognition underscores the value of industry professionals playing an active role in education – and the lasting difference it can make.