The partnership between MediaCity and Anchor is built on shared ESG values.

Rozalia Rushfirth, Key Account Director at Anchor Group Services said: “On this International ESG Day, it’s about having the courage and confidence to look at how something is done and changing it when it can be made better. Wherever possible we use recycled consumables and cleaning materials with the lowest possible carbon footprint. If consumables are not recycled, they are from sustainable sources. We are now supplying many items including vacuum cleaners, janitorial trollies, mop buckets and many others that are made from between 75% and 100% recycled plastic.

“We pride ourselves on true dedication to ESG values and take action rather than just paying it lip service. We’re delighted with the illustrative impact our innovative solutions have had on MediaCity – not just towards helping the environment and boosting sustainability, but in delivering evidenced cost savings for the client in the process.”

A spokesperson at MediaCity, added: “As we celebrate International ESG Day, it’s an opportune moment to highlight the tangible results that collaboration on sustainability can have across our community and operations.

“Anchor and MediaCity work closely together to achieve ESG shared goals. We don’t see them as contractors – we see them as a vital part of our business as well.”

By integrating sustainability into its operations, Anchor Group Services continues to redefine industry standards, proving that business success and environmental responsibility go hand in hand. As the world marks International ESG Day, Anchor remains committed to driving meaningful change in ESG performance at MediaCity and across its entire client portfolio – showing that innovation, ethics, and impact truly go together.
