

Carlisle Support Services Appoints Jason Gray as Technical Solutions Director

4 hours ago

Carlisle Support Services has appointed Jason Gray as Technical Solutions Director as the business continues to strengthen its technology led security and facilities management offering.

The company said the appointment reflects its ongoing focus on combining advanced technology with people led service delivery to provide clients with integrated and future focused security solutions.

Gray joins Carlisle with extensive experience across the fire and security sectors, having built his career from an engineering background into senior leadership positions focused on innovation, integrated system design and commercial strategy.

In his new role, he will lead the development of technical solutions spanning CCTV, access control, remote monitoring and connected technologies. He will work closely with Carlisle's senior leadership team to develop systems designed to align technical capability with operational and commercial requirements.

The appointment also marks a return to the business for Gray, who previously worked alongside Carlisle as a partner.

"I am really excited to be joining Carlisle Support Services," he said.

"Having worked with the business previously as a partner, it feels great to be back with an organisation I already know, trust and respect.

"Carlisle has always stood out to me for its supportive and professional culture, and I am looking forward to developing practical, innovative solutions that deliver real value for our customers."

Focus on integrated technology and innovation

Throughout his career, Gray has worked with manufacturers and technology partners internationally to support the development and introduction of new systems into the UK market.

Carlisle said his technical expertise and practical approach to innovation will support the company's wider strategy around integrated security technology and intelligent FM solutions.

Paul Evans, Chief Executive Officer at Carlisle Support Services, said the appointment strengthens the company's leadership capability as technology continues to reshape the sector.

"Jason's arrival is a significant addition to our leadership team," he said.

"His deep technical expertise, combined with his unique history as a former partner, gives him a natural understanding of our culture and ensures he is perfectly positioned to drive our technical security strategy forward.

"Combining the latest technology with our outstanding Carlisle family members will deliver enhanced protection for our clients."

Carlisle said the appointment forms part of its broader investment in innovation, operational capability and future ready service delivery across the security and facilities management sectors.