

Munnelly Group Appoints New Managing Director as Weston Analytics Targets New Era of Innovation

2 hours ago

The Munnelly Group has announced the appointment of Tom Emery as Managing Director of Weston Analytics, reinforcing the growing importance of technology, data and innovation within their business strategy.

Tom brings more than a decade of experience in operational leadership, utilising data and analytics to drive service transformation and performance improvement within complex and high-volume environments.

In previous roles at both Heathrow and Wilson James, Tom has managed large operational portfolios across critical service operations, along with digital transformation programmes and business improvement initiatives across aviation and transport, security, and workforce operations.

In his new role at Weston Analytics, Tom will lead the continued development of digital and analytical capability across the group with a focus on creating scalable solutions that help businesses operate smarter, make faster decisions, and unlock greater value from data and operational intelligence.

Weston Analytics utilises the latest technology and innovations to generate business value; its Fatigue360 platform was implemented at Transport for London in 2023, with TfL recently investing in additional user licences.

Tom's approach will combine operational credibility with a strong focus on innovation, bringing together technology, people, process, and insights into a more connected operating model. As part of Munnelly

Group's senior leadership team, Tom will guide Weston Analytics through its next phase of growth as digital capability becomes ever more central to the future of construction and infrastructure.

Commenting on his appointment, Tom Emery said: "I'm excited to join the business at such an important stage of its growth journey. There is a huge opportunity to build on the strong foundations already in place and evolve our digital and analytics capabilities into something that creates value for clients and external partners whilst supporting the group internally. What excites me most is the combination of ambition and opportunity. My focus is to build scalable products and leverage my passion for data to improve operational visibility and create a more connected, insight-led way of operating across the business."

Paul David Munnely, CEO of the Munnely Group, said: "Our ambition at the Munnely Group is to be the delivery partner our clients turn to first across the full project lifecycle, and that depends as much on the technology and data we bring as it does on the people we put on the ground. Weston Analytics sits at the heart of that ambition. Tom's appointment as MD reflects both the central role we expect the business to play in delivering Target2030 and the confidence I have in him personally to lead it through its next phase of growth."
